of. Even the wealth of a Rockefeller could not long have sustained the hungry millions. No government could stand the strain of supporting its people. The little labors of unconsidered individuals alone can provide sustenance for all.

So it is a timely and acute question—as well as the oldest in the world—that is raised by this Lesson upon the feeding of the Israelites in the Desert of Sinai.

The freed Hebrew slaves had been miraculously delivered from Pharach's army, which had perished in the Red Sea. They had proceeded a distance into the wilderness, with many murmurings. Then the supplies of food which they had brought from Egypt began to give out. Their reproaches of Moses increased.

Then the supplies of food which they had brought from Egypt began to give out. Their reproaches of Moses increased.

The Arabs At the Gate.

I know Sinai, and the impossibility of feeding any large population from the sandy, flinty desert. Water supplies are scant, and far spaced. The Monks in the Monastery of St. Katherines, on Mount Sinai, have their food supplies brought in from Egypt. They, in turn, give a daily ration of bread to a small tribe of retainer Arabs. Each morning the Arab women come and hunker outside the monastery gate. Where small, unleavened loaves, literally as hard as rock, are doled out to them. It is a bitter alms, and never accompanied by spiritual food; for in the long centuries of the monastery's existence it has made no converts to centuries of the monastery's existence it has made no converts to Christianity from among the Christianity from among the Arabs.

Far different was the provision made by God for the hungry Israelites. The food He provided was sweet, as well as sustaining. But the people had to contribute the labor of gathering and preparing it. And it was on a day-by-day basis. So the Lord's Prayer runs "Give us this day our daily bread"—or, as a revised version renders it, "Give us day by day our daily bread."

A large part of the world's woe is due to anxlety about bread for years hence. Rich men build up trusts to insure prosperity for their families to the third and fourth generation—although legislation seems to trend toward breaking up this practice. Every generation should toil for its own bread, and every person. Otherwise, a class of parasites is developed. Our whole new method of social justice looks toward the equalization of labor and rewards. The Northern Bapilist Convention, at its recent Philadelphia session, even went so far as to advocate, officially, the lim-The that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that taketh a city.—Prov. 16:32.

Hunger and food have been thrust up from the masses of men into the consciousness of politicians and economists. All other problems of statecraft and of life have been subordinated to this one of providing bread for the needy. What was ten years ago only each man's individual concern was suddenly turned, by the depression, into the government's business. To the glory of our Christian civilization let it be recorded that in the United States and Canada nobody starved, even during the direst days of need. In China an Russia, myriads died from lack of food, during this same period.

Perhaps it is desirable that we should confront the burden and problem of millions and billions of public money spent for relief in order to make us realize how dependent the on-going of organized life is upon the efforts of the individual. I saw this first in the great Chinese famine of 1906-07. Even the wealth of a Rockefeller could not long have sustained the hungry millions. No government could stand the strain of supporting its people. The little labors of unconsidered individuals alone can provide sustendance for all.

"A Man Learns A Lot, Building 25 Million Cars!"

"Seems to me, nothing ever takes the place of experience. You learn to do a good job by doing it. The more you do it, the more you learn about it.

Take cars, for instance. They tell me Henry Ford has built 25 million. Nobody else ever had near that much experience. So, the way I figure, Henry Ford's the man I want to build my car.

"Besides, all those cars weren't sold-most were bought. Bought because folks got more for their money — because Henry Ford did a better job every year.

"This year's Ford is the best yet. Handles easy, rides easy, runs smooth and sweet. I know. One day after I'd been sitting here watching the Fords go by, I says to myself, 'Jud, you go buy one.' And I did!" - - - Get Yours Today at

DANDRUFF TREATMENT.

CURING DANDRUFF Only this much is known about dandruff — absolute and continual cleanliness will cure it. First, kill the germ,

Now, before anything touches your hair, be sure it is clean and that it has not touched your hair before. Hats should be new or dry cleaned, brushes washed and scalded with antiseptic water and dried in the hot sun. Combs as well. Even a coat collar that has been worn near enough to touch the hair should be cleaned. You have scotched the dandruff germ with the oil, but the minute you use a brush, or put on a used hat, back come the germs and you re-infect your scalp again. The dandruff germ is so minute they cannot filter it, see it, or isolate it, but they know it ex-Now, before anything touches and continual cleanliness will cure it. First, kill the germ, as Miss Forbes tells you to-day, then prevent re-infection.

Are you bothered with dandruff? Or have you a husband or a brother whose hair is getting thin and whose coat collar sometimes shows that fine powdering white he means only one thing—scalp trouble. Because, if this is the case coat collar sometimes shows that fine powdering which there is a cure, but you must stiplicate there is a cure, but you must stiplicate there is a cure, but you must stiplicate the follow these directions very carefully. The treatment was recommended to E. K. Forbes me in London recently by a scalp specialist, and he had cured many people.

First of all, buy some oll of cade. I pay 15c a dram for this, and a little goes a long way. Wash the scalp, rub on the olf of cade, and then steam it into the scalp. A shop would do this for you if you wanted, using the regular steam machines. Or you can rub it in, roll your head up in a light towel wrung from hot water and then sit in the hot sun. Or you could sit in the sun with the oll on your scalp, and let the heat of the sun work it in for you. The steaming hot towels might be better, for they will open the pores of the scalp and let the heat of the scalp and let the blosoak in Keep the oil on for 15 minutes. Shampooi toff.

Now, before anything touches your halr, be sure it is clean and that it has not touched your hair.

Sheriff Hicks said Morse had suffered from shell shock during the world war and that he had supported his family on his government pension and by raising a garden and occasionally workling as a laborer.
